

American Black Vulture

The Black Vulture is a New World species that lives across parts of the southeastern United States and into South America. It has an overall black body plumage; the white-tipped wing feathers are usually only visible in flight. The head is dark grey and the tip of the hooked bill is creamy white.

