

Lesser Yellow-headed Vulture

The Lesser Yellow-headed Vulture is a New World species with a keen sense of smell. They are closely related to Greater Yellow-headed Vultures, but can be told apart by their more brownish body plumage, lighter leg color, and generally more colorful face which includes skin in shades of blue-grey, pink, and, of course, yellow.

